

Tony Conaghan
Practice Group Leader for Intellectual Property & Technology for Australia & New Zealand
DLA Phillips Fox

Tony is the Practice Group Leader for Intellectual Property & Technology for Australia & New Zealand at DLA Phillips Fox.

Tony is one of Australia's most experienced lawyers in his areas of expertise of intellectual property and technology, including biotechnology and life sciences.

Tony has his Masters of Law; specialising in intellectual property. He has extensive international experience both with commercialisation, licensing and intellectual property disputes.

He is a Fellow of the Australian Institute of Company Directors.

Tony has advised the Queensland Government and its agencies, Universities and their commercialisation arms, public biotechs, (both listed and unlisted), private companies, research institutions, venture capitalists and angel investors. Tony signed off on the UniQuest (Dr Ian Frazer) / CSL / Merck Gardosil licences.

Tony Conaghan is currently advising the Queensland Government about the Queensland Biodiscovery Act, advising in mergers and acquisitions of biotechs, international and local licensing and in the resolution of intellectual property disputes.

Tony is a member of the DLA Piper worldwide Life Sciences leaders group which communicates and confers regularly in respect of international developments in Life Sciences