Biotechs spruce up

Dimerix Bioscience will spruik its wares at the AusBiotech conference in Melbourne today, in a bid to attract investors for the next stage of its protein business.

The unlisted Nedlands-based Dimerix is one of 40 private and public companies presenting at the conference and one of four WA life sciences groups hoping to attract investor interest.

"We are not in the process of capital raising at the moment, but in terms of biotech companies you always have to have your eye on the next development phase and this is a good opportunity to meet and start talking to some investors," Dimerix chief executive Dr James Williams said.
